ROUTE TO:

Reap the Rewards of Giving Back

Supporting a non-profit or charitable cause has many benefits — and not just for the charity. Your business will gain a more positive image, as well as increased community support, customer loyalty and employee satisfaction.

You may see increased sales, too. In a recent study, 65% of Americans said that when price and quality are equal, they would choose a brand associated with a good cause.

The key to a successful cause marketing campaign is to plan carefully. Start by following these steps:

- Choose a cause that fits your business. You can select a cause that's obviously related to your company, such as a bookstore supporting a literacy program. The tie can also be less obvious, like a bank or doctor's office choosing a cause that promotes strong families. Whatever you choose, make sure it reflects your company's core values.
- Generate employee support. Involve your employees in choosing a cause and planning your campaign. Make them proud to participate — distribute t-shirts, hats, lapel pins, silicone wristbands or ribbons with the name of the charity and your logo.
- Be strategic. While you don't want your campaign to come across as a marketing gimmick, you should maximize the benefits of your efforts. A local dry cleaner, for example, advertised that they would provide free dry-cleaning for all coats and blankets people dropped off for the needy. The coat drive brought people into the store — and the cleaner's cost of acquiring new customers dropped 67%.
- Make your efforts visible. If you're supporting a charity, talk with them about how often (and where) your logo will be displayed. If you're sponsoring an event or youth league, hand out promotional windbreakers, lanyards, sports bottles, sunscreen and towels.

Interested in starting a cause marketing campaign of your own — or improving the one you have now? Call us today for ideas on getting the most out of your charitable efforts.

How to Keep Your Employees Happy

The loss of a good employee comes at a steep cost. It affects your company's customer service and employee morale. Plus, it brings the added expense of recruiting, hiring and training a replacement.

That's why more and more businesses are focusing on employee retention. Here are some tips for keeping your employees happy — and on your payroll:

■ Ask your employees what motivates them. What perks would they like? What would make them feel appreciated? How can you help them meet their career goals?

■ Take care of the basics. Make sure employees have the tools they need to get the job done, and that they have a comfortable working environment.

■ Express your appreciation. It only takes a few minutes to send a nice thank-you note with movie tickets, or a gift basket of delicious treats, spa items or candles. Be sure to select a gift that matches the employee's personal likes and interests.

■ Make them proud. Give employees logo'd travel mugs, desk accessories and portfolios they can use with pride. Consider rewarding your staff with attractive awards, plaques or clocks they can display in their work area.

■ Give employees the opportunity to grow. Provide monthly "lunch and learns" or other training classes. Give attendees nice notebooks (like these attractive note wallets) and pens imprinted with your company logo.

■ Build loyalty and morale with an ongoing recognition program. One hospital gives employees tokens for going above and beyond. These tokens can be collected and redeemed for a variety of rewards, including electronics, jewelry and clothing. The program is saving the hospital $2 million in turnover costs — every year!

Fortunately, it's fairly simple to make employees feel valued. Contact us today for some great ideas that will keep your employees happy!

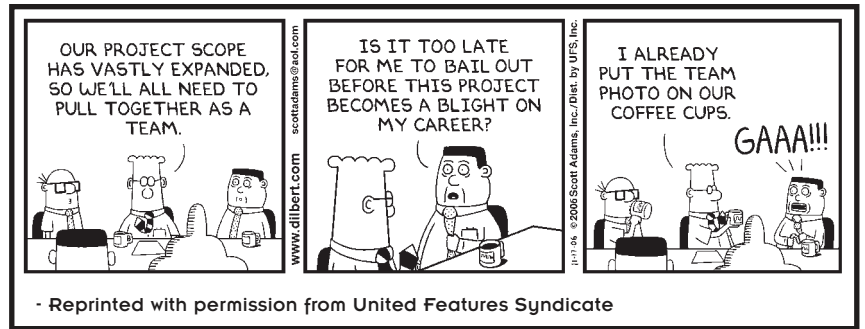

An Easy Way to Maximize Your Results

Here's an easy way to track the results of your next promotion: print a unique URL (web address), phone extension, or code on your promotional items. This number should be unique to the promotion. That way, when customers log on or call, you'll know which promotion they're responding to.

For example, an airline promoting non-stop flights to a new destination had workers dressed like flight attendants hand out logo'd bags of pretzels with a unique URL. When people logged on to learn more, the airline was able to measure exactly how many people were responding to the promotion.

You can do the same with pens, lip balm, calendars, magnets, mugs, calculators and more. You can even imprint the information on a card you attach to a gift of t-shirts, hats or other apparel. It's an excellent way to figure out what works best with your prospects — and build on that success.

Landing New Business

A Southwestern bank with 60 branches wanted to promote its new free checking accounts. Playing off customers' skepticism about getting anything free from a bank, the company created a when pigs fly theme. Customers who signed up for a new free checking account were given a piggy bank shaped like a flying pig.

The bank opened 14,085 new accounts during the promotion – exceeding their projection by 70%!

Dear Addy,

ANSWERS TO YOUR PROMOTIONAL QUESTIONS

Q: Our mortgage company is looking for promotional products to welcome new customers to our business – and their new homes. Any ideas?

A: Show customers you care with a gift they can use around their new home, like a logo'd cordless power screwdriver or hammer. Home décor products such as photo frames are another great idea. Items to help be prepared for an emergency, like a first aid kit, fire extinguisher, or emergency lantern, would also be appreciated.

Q: Our pet store needs some inexpensive promotional items to attract new customers. Can you help?

A: Of course! How about giving customers a pet food container or bowl when they purchase food? It will help remind them of your store when it's time to buy more. You can also keep your customers and their pets happy with giveaways like logo'd collars, leashes, toys, and even bone-shaped key tags!
